ARE WE ABANDONING DISCIPLINE IN THE HOME?

A continuing tendency to relent on discipline In the homes of today no doubt is having a tremendous result in rising delinqunecy and disregard of the sacredness of the home. The lack of control, respect for others, disregard of uprightness and honesty can well find their fruition in lawlessness, dishonesty and other so apparent today.

A pamphlet issued recently by a major church group on the subject of discipline in the home brings out some fundamental and common sense thinking on the subject. Some highlights from the folder include:

Effective discipline is needed in every home Parents may disagree about what constitutes effectiveness, but most will agree that every child needs discipline for the development of mature character and a wholesome personality.

Discipline is defined usually as punishment to bring about obedience. A much broader understanding of the word, however, is need ed. A proper understanding of discipline will reveal that the methods of discipline may be much more varied than many people realize and that, to be effective, discipline must be a well as the children. Even the atmosphere of the home affects the discipline of the home with the discipline of the child. The recent trend, which is still quite prevalent, away from any effective discipline in the home has been a factor in many of the juvenile problems that we face today. Parents are increasingly realizing that the psychology of a generation or two ago which rejected practically all discipline was tragically faulty. They are now wanting to recapture something of the discipline used by their parents and grandparents Of course, discipline serves many specific pur poses. It teaches children rspect for authority the consequences of wrong-doing, the habits of right living, the quality of unselfishness and the importance of self-discipline. According to Proverbs discipline proves the love of parents for their chlidren: "He who spares the rod hates his son, but he who loves him is diligent to discipline him" (Proverbs 13:24)

Here we are concerned primarily, however,

Society insists that maturing individuals control their impulses. If parents do not teach their children this self-control then society tors in and does it. Such tardy discipline by society is not only sharply painful, but is also is generally unsuccessful in leading the person toward stable character and a disciplined life
